2019 International Public Safety Association Symposium

Overview

Natural and man-made disasters will always be a part of our world. These events are unavoidable. Public safety officials are taxed with additional responsibility when disaster strikes, and they perform duties beyond their standard scope of practice.

There are best practices, lessons learned and resources that exist to aid short-term and long-term disaster recovery. This educational training symposium will shed light on available resources and ideas to consider as new strategies for rebuilding your communities after disaster and even your own teams.

This event will bring together public safety officials - law enforcement, fire, EMS, telecommunications, emergency management and allied emergency responders from around the United States and internationally. It will be an amazing networking and learning opportunity for everyone that attends.

Attendees will walk away with several educational resources, tips and ideas that they can apply in their agency.
